To whom it may concern:

The idea initially to get chickens came from needing to do some creative thinking to assist my children in various ways. My two older children live part time in a situation that currently cannot be changed that affects them negatively and has for quite some years. Due to this situation and my inability to make unilateral decisions in regards to therapy, and they are not allowed to go to church as my younger two go. I started thinking creatively to help them regulate their feelings, give them a sense of purpose and provide a relaxing environment for at least part of their lives. We thought of chickens and ducks because they are prey animals are very sensitive to emotions and actions, tone of voice and body language. My older children, in order to care for them and build relationships with them, are forced to regulate their very big emotions, otherwise the animals are too scared to be around them. The older children, and our younger children also take care of them on a regular basis, helping to support our need to grow the desire in our children to work hard and care for others, as these animals are dependent on us. We have seen tremendous amounts of growth in a very short time. We were also thrilled with the other gifts these animals bring. We are a family who enjoys helping others in various ways. We give away 95% of our eggs to others, we know a lot of families that are struggling to put food on the table and it brings joy to our family to be able to help in any way. We have also been able to use these small animals with other families and children to encourage the same types of emotional regulation and distraction as they are able to identify and talk about their feelings because of the need to regulate their emotions which then produces the ability to think clearly and soundly.

When we decided to go forward with the plan, we took a look at our yard and the potential areas the coops could go, due to the size and shape of our yard, existing structures and then of course property lines.

We thought about putting our coop adjacent to the front of the shed-pointed to the center of the yard. However this came with a few problems. First, we have 5 children. They play various sports and practice and play in the yard by themselves, and as a family. They have also accumulated a number of friends from an adjacent neighborhood, who regularly come and play at our house and in our yard. Our home is safe and supervised, where food is provided and needs are met if they are not being met elsewhere, that includes emotionally. We did not want to monopolize the entire yard, as we wish for this continue. We also would like to add to our yard later for these purposes with a possible trampoline or pool to continue to accommodate the needs of our family, and those of adjacent neighborhood friends.

We also took into account the health and well being of the animals. The only areas of our yard that have shade is the inner side- adjacent to our neighbor, and then also in the front yard. The center of the yard has no covering and is at the mercy of all elements; sun, rain, wind, snow, and ice. Taking into account the sky rocketing temperatures in the Summer, and plummeting temperatures in the Winter. We thought best (after talking to and securing the permission and blessing of the closest and affected neighbors) to utilize the side of the existing shed as a source to help shelter from the elements while also utilizing the shade and shrubbery for privacy and protection for the animals. Finally, we found this to be the best placement for our specific yard shape is because of our other animals. We have four boxers. We also utilize the yard for their needs such as using the bathroom, running and playing if the day did not provide an opportunity for a walk. If we were to place the coop/run in the center of the yard, furthest away from every property line, however still not meeting the minimum there, it would provide a huge source of interest every day for them. With it being off to the side and not front and center, it is much easier to train them to be disinterested. Which will lead to it being ignored by them as time goes on. From what we understand, our closest neighbors (the three closest- each side and behind) enjoy watching the chickens, and hearing and seeing our family take care of them. We hope to have the opportunity to continue to share these blessings that we have experienced with others, as we know they are not just providing a nutritional need.
